My name is Professor Brian George Mc Enery. I am a former Army officer, and a former lecturer and researcher in Mathematical Physics in University College Cork. You can view my LinkedIn profile to get further details.

I am currently leading a project which has global focus, and is designed to create the greatest growth in knowledge that the world has seen for millenia. But due to indifference and malicious intent within Ireland both the project and my own personal circumstances are in great danger of faltering. To prevent this I need immediate political action, not tomorrow, not in an hour, right now. It has become necessary for me to make this appeal, because despite nearly three months of interactions with the political leadership of Ireland not one ounce of support is forthcoming for my work. The political leadership have been aware of me and my work since 1994, and have been aware of the current phase of my work, directly, since 2010, when I inaugurated my university in the Metropole Hotel on the 27th of November. They were aware of my plans to establish my university on Spike Island, the island where I was born. They were aware of the nineteen years I spent conducting research and development into educational software and content, as well as research into dynamical systems, acoustic graphics and the utilisation of Irish as a language of science and technology. They were also aware of the work I have done integrating three great traditions of knowledge, that of vedic knowledge from India, modern knowledge based on the Greek tradition, and gaelic knowledge from Ireland. They were aware of my software development prowess, and my intention to establish global facilities to promote an approach to education which will alleviate the current crisis in education caused by educational systems which are not able to cope with the expansion in awareness which the world is going through, right at this moment in time. Even with all of this, and there is a lot, lot more, there has been stunning silence and no support for my work.

Over the past year I had to withdraw, because I did not have the energy to continue. But I gained that energy back during a ten week trip in and out of the mountains in Kerry and Cork. During this time I spoke with, and interacted with, hundreds of people, and they all supported my approach to knowledge. It is them I am representing in this call for political action. Not just myself, but the population of the Irish nation. As politicians you are supposed to represent that population, not narrow party political ideals, not sectional commercial interests, and most definitely not European, IMF and World Bank interests. If you do not support this call for political action you are failing in your fundamental political duty, which is to represent the people and bring their message to the meeting. That after all is the correct interpretation of Teachtaire Dáile.

So what lead to this situation and why did I choose the course that I did. I am in the process of writing a complete curriculum vitae, again. But that will take time, and I need action now, this minute. Pick up the phone and do something. Check out my profile on LinkedIn. I need action today. Today must be a day of action.

I am not going to go though the whole story, because there is a lot in it. But the crucial point is that I left UCC for a number of reasons but the most important one in this context is that I observed that mathematical education in this country was a total failure. That was in 1992, after I had completed my PhD. Since then I have worked tirelessly to develop an approach designed to alleviate that situation, and have met with the most incredible and obstinate opposition from the Department of Education, the NCCA, the State Exams Commission, and virtually every academic institution in the country. Leading that opposition has been the university where I did my PhD. Despite numerous approaches over the years I have been unable to have any professional interaction with UCC since 1994. At that time I had stood in a by-election for Cork South Central, representing the Natural Law Party. There happened to be a conference on in UCC at the time of the election and I was treated royally by the President. He knew, this guy could be important, this guy could be a politician, and I must butter him up. That changed in 1996, because I made an ethical decision which was to begin the campaign to Ban Genetically Modified Foods in Ireland. This began a seventeen year period of malicious intent against me and my work. It was practised not only in the Department of Education, the NCCA, the State Exams Commission and academic institutions, but also by every development agency in Ireland. I have approached every single one of them, and not one of them was willing to provide any support of any kind for my work. And I wasn't always working alone, and most definitely I am not working alone right now. There are people involved in this project from all over the world. I get great support from people all over the world but indifference and malicious intent is all I get from Government Funded agencies in Ireland. That must stop today. A political way must be found to provide me with enough money to survive. At present I have €10.34 in my pocket. I have expended all of my resources. Somewhere in the region of €50,000.00 over the past two years or so. Doing what I do does not come cheap. From the 1st September until three days ago I was travelling constantly in Ireland, and on the internet, to raise awareness of my work. I was working on average eighteen hour a day. I initiated thirty scientific papers based on my research. I initiated my university on the internet. From the 3rd of August to the 20th November this year, I have written seven books of poetry. Currently I am writing a book, The Shield of Invincible Computation, designed with the intention of explaining my work over the past twenty one years. All of this while in a day or so's time I am in danger of being homeless and penniless. I am not looking for charity, I am looking for what is due to me. As you are all aware, Article 45.2.1 of the Constitution of Ireland prescribes that the directive principle of social policy is that a person has the ability to make a living in whatever way they see fit. This has been denied to me for 21 years.

I do not want advice, I do not want to be told to talk with this person, or that person, or the other person. It has always proved fruitless. Here is my bank account, I need funds from central government put into that account immediately, today. I need a regular personal salary in order to continue this project. I also need a regular salary for a small staff of ten, to commence the detailed planning required for the next phase of development. These requirements will be communicated to you in due course. In time I will need a pledge or a bond from the Irish Government to allow me to establish the university, the healing centre, and the software development initiatives which will guarantee that I can create 1,000,000 jobs globally over the next five years. That is the task I have set for myself and my collaborators.

So that's it, act now.
